BABE RUTH

RUTH, "BABE," GEORGE HERMAN (1895-1948), won fame as the greatest slugger in baseball history. He set many records, including his 714 regular-season home runs. Ruth had a personality that caught the imagination of fans and helped popularize baseball.

Ruth was born in Baltimore, Md., on Feb. 6, 1895. He was raised at St. Mary's Industrial School in Baltimore. One of Ruth’s teachers recognized his skill at baseball and helped him start his career in 1914. Later that year, Ruth joined the Boston Red Sox and became a successful pitcher. But when the Red Sox sold him to the New York Yankees in 1920, he gave up pitching to play in the outfield and concentrate on hitting. In 1927, Ruth set a record of 60 home runs during a single season. His slugging power made him baseball’s biggest attraction, and when the Yankees built a huge new stadium, it was nicknamed "The House That Ruth Built." The Yankees released him at the end of the 1934 season, and he finished his career with the Boston Braves in 1935. Ruth died of cancer. Ed Fitzgerald.
