Martel's La France ignorée:
New Information from Two Post Cards to his Publisher

by

Trevor R. SHAW*

Two post cards, written in 1927 by the famous French speleologist Martel, were recently discovered in Paris where they were bought by the author for 1 F. 50 each in one of the book stalls on the left bank of the Seine.

Edouard Alfred Martel (1859-1938) had already published some 16 books and more than 780 articles by 1927 and in that year he was preparing his lengthy work La France ignorée. This was a speleological survey of the various regions of France, amounting to 600 printed pages and published in two volumes in 1928 and 1930. These post cards, evidently written to his publisher, throw some light on his progress with the manuscript and in particular they establish a date when the first part of the work had been completed.

Both the messages were written on picture post cards showing the Gouffre de Padirac, the great open shaft and river cave which Martel had explored at the turn of the century and which he had subsequently opened to the public by the Société Anonyme de Puits de Padirac. The French texts of both cards are reproduced here in facsimile and, his hurried writing being not easy to read, transcriptions are given in the appendix. Translated into English, they read as follows:

24 March [19]27

Dear Sir,

Can you make me an appointment for the afternoon of Thursday 31 March or Friday 1 April, at a time convenient to yourself.

I would bring you the manuscript (a typed copy) of the first half of my work so that we could talk more profitably.

Yours very sincerely,
E. A. Martel

E. A. Martel

It will be seen that neither the name of the addressee nor the title of the book concerned is explicitly stated. However, La France ignorée (1928, 1930) was the only substantial work of Martel to be published about this time. All the various articles issued in 1927 and 1928 are short (not more than 16 pages) and even the booklet L'Aven Armand (Martel, 1927) was of only 48 small pages. None of these items was large enough to have justified the separate delivery of "the first half of my work", whereas La France ignorée was indeed published in two halves with two years between them. Moreover, of the works that could have been in preparation at the time, only La France ignorée was long enough to have galleys numbered up to 19.

Neither card bears any stamp or postmark and they must have been posted in envelopes carrying the address, which were subsequently destroyed. It is clear from the content, though, that they were written to his publisher. The publisher of La France ignorée was in fact the Librairie Delagrave, who had already produced several of Martel's books, including Les Abîmes and Irlande et cavernes anglaises.

In summary, these two post cards provide evidence that:

- a. all or part of the manuscript of La France ignorée vol. 1 was complete before the end of March 1927.
- b. by early July the printing of the book was well in hand, with 19 galley proofs (equivalent perhaps to some 70 pages) already through the author's hands.
