This issue of Genocide Studies and Prevention continues a conversation that began in 2013 with the publication of 8.3, Humanitarian Technologies and Genocide Prevention. The current issue, titled Information and Communications Technologies in Mass Atrocities Research and Response, is guest edited by Colette Mazzucelli and Anna Visvizi. In their introductory state of the field article, they focus on the enduring ethical questions that surround information communications technologies for mass atrocity research and response. The articles in this issue contribute to the study and practice of mobile technology to document forensic evidence of sexual violence, the use of satellite and mobile phones, DNA technology and field dynamics in conflict related mass fatalities, human rights media, and a theory of harm for information communication technologies.

The editors wish to thank the following institutions for supporting the special issue: The Robert Bosch Foundation in Stuttgart, New York University, New York University-Washington DC, The United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, The Global Diplomacy Lab, and Brandeis University's Summer Institute for Israel Studies. We offer a special thanks to Susan Braden, for all of her tireless efforts as GSP's Managing Editor.
