TOPICS OF DISCUSSION

Mr. Magill came to USF in 1985 as an undergraduate transfer student.

College selection; Transfer to USF
Though Mr. Magill grew up in South Florida, he chose initially to go to college at the University of Cincinnati. He cites snow and inclement weather as a primary reason for “wanting to get out” of the Midwest and move back to Florida. As a result, he began applying for various Florida state universities, finally settling upon USF, where he joined the local chapter of the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity.

Kidnap the President Day
“Kidnap the President” was part of a weeklong charity event where members of the fraternities and sororities would, after kidnapping one another, attempt to kidnap the presidents of each Greek organization on campus. The “kidnapped” presidents would be transported to a secure location where they were “wined and dined” until adequate ransom (canned food) was provided. On one occasion in 1986, when U.S. President Ronald Reagan was scheduled to visit the South Florida campus, the Secret Service investigated the fraternities to ensure that their activities did not raise suspicion or disrupt the President’s visit. “It all worked out fine,” he remembers.

Academics
Magill originally planned to be a business major, but made the transition to political science after taking Dr. Anne Kelly’s Florida Politics and Government class with several of his fraternity brothers. He believes his initial interest in politics came largely from his family, growing up in an environment where such matters were frequently discussed. He graduated in December of 1986 with his degree in political science and then moved to Tallahassee where he began working for Governor Bob Martinez.

Living arrangements
While attending classes at USF, Magill lived off-campus at the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity house. “It was the sight of many a good party – certainly a lot of study sessions!”
Recreation and leisure
Because there was no football team at the university, the basketball team was the center of campus athletics. He recalls participating with his fraternity brothers in the homecoming parade his first year at USF by decorating a flatbed truck with potted palm trees from the fraternity house and banners hung along the sides (and “a keg or two”). The following year they put a bit more effort into the event, constructing a paper-mache bull later destroyed in the rain. “It was a lot of fun.” Magill also remembers spending a good amount of time at the University Center and a restaurant inside called the Empty Keg.

Alumni Association
Currently, Magill serves on the board of directors at the USF Alumni Association. “[I] have a good time with that ... it’s been exciting to see the place grow.” He served as president of the Association from 2002-2003, which he recalls was, “a great experience.”

Campus growth
“I’m just amazed to see how the campus has grown. It provided a great social life [and] a great academic life while I was here in the mid-eighties ... It’s evolved into ... very much a home that people can identify with.”

Martinez campaign for governor
As an undergraduate political science student at USF, Magill got involved with Bob Martinez’s gubernatorial campaign, where he was able to work first for credit hours and later for a modest wage. Within days of his college graduation, Martinez won his campaign and Magill was hired to work on his staff in Tallahassee. “It’s been a lot of fun – eighteen years now.” Since then, Magill has also worked closely with current Governor Jeb Bush on his election campaigns. He now works as a lobbyist for a law firm in Tallahassee.

Teaching at USF
Mr. Magill is also involved in co-teaching a class on politics with Judge Gross here at USF, a project which they began four years ago. They frequently invite various speakers to the weekly class meetings including state legislators, publishers, and USF graduates. The first night of each semester, they will bring in five students from the previous semester to speak about their experiences in the class.

His advice for current students is simply to get involved and stay involved with the university and local community in whatever capacity they find most compelling and rewarding.
