Osceola's enemies acknowledged his virtues

Hampton Dunn

Follow this and additional works at: http://scholarcommons.usf.edu/flstud_pub

Part of the American Studies Commons, and the Community-based Research Commons

Scholar Commons Citation

http://scholarcommons.usf.edu/flstud_pub/2631

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Digital Collection - Florida Studies Center at Scholar Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Digital Collection - Florida Studies Center Publications by an authorized administrator of Scholar Commons. For more information, please contact scholarcommons@usf.edu.
OSCEOLA'S ENEMIES ACKNOWLEDGED HIS VIRTUES

By HAMPTON DUNN

SILVER SPRINGS -- An angry young man of his times was the handsome and virile Indian warrior, Osceola. A native of Hamilton County, Osceola moved to the Ocala area where he grew up and where he achieved fame in the Indian war to prevent shipment of the Reds to the West by the U. S. Government.

There's a glistening white statue on the edge of sparkling Silver Springs that depicts Osceola in his most famous pose. It shows the irate young sub-chief displaying his emotions by stabbing a treaty which allegedly had been signed by fellow tribesmen with the whites. "The only treaty I will execute is with this," growled Osceola slashing the piece of paper with a great knife. "This is my mark I will make no other." His inflammatory oration at Silver Springs on that memorable day, Oct. 23, 1834, fired up his race and ignited the Seven Years War.

As a strapping youth wise to the words of "Ocali country," Osceola served as a guide and scout for Territorial Gov. William P. DuVal. Later he was friendly with the Indian agent, Gen. Wiley Thompson. This friendship severed when Thompson ordered the capture of the chief's lovely wife, Morning Dew, because she was supposed to be the daughter of a runaway slave. The mighty chief swore vengeance. He became an important Indian military genius and a noted strategist in American history. Even his enemies lauded him as a "Patriot and Warrior."

Osceola was treacherously captured under a flag of truce.