1-1-1960

"Tampa Town" was launching pad for Jules Verne

Hampton Dunn

Follow this and additional works at: http://scholarcommons.usf.edu/flstud_pub

Part of the American Studies Commons, and the Community-based Research Commons

Scholar Commons Citation
Dunn, Hampton, ""Tampa Town" was launching pad for Jules Verne" (1960). Digital Collection - Florida Studies Center Publications. Paper 2648.
http://scholarcommons.usf.edu/flstud_pub/2648

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Digital Collection - Florida Studies Center at Scholar Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Digital Collection - Florida Studies Center Publications by an authorized administrator of Scholar Commons. For more information, please contact scholarcommons@usf.edu.
TAMPA TOWN’ WAS LAUNCHING PAD FOR JULES VERNE

By HAMPTON DUNN

TAMPA -- A passage from Jules Verne’s "From the Earth to the Moon," published in 1835, reads:

"The Frenchman and two Americans entered the enclosure reserved in the center of the multitude...Ten o'clock struck. The moment had arrived for taking their places in the projectile...thirty-eight, thirty-nine, forty!!! Instantly, Murchison pressed the key...An appalling, unearthly report followed...An immense spout of fire shot up from the bowels of the earth...The earth heaved up...spectators obtained a momentary glimpse of the projectile cleaving the air in the midst of fiery vapors...The glare of the flames lit up the whole of Florida..."

A hundred years after the prophetic author who never left France wrote those lines, U.S. space projects were being launched regularly from Florida, not too far away from what Verne called "Tampa Town." There were many curious parallels between his story and the actual moon shots of today.

Jules Verne is not a prophet without honor in Tampa Town. An official marker at the approach of the Ballast Point Pier tells of the park at this scenic point being named Jules Verne Park in honor of the French writer who did so much to publicize Tampa.

It was thus named by Mrs. Chester W. Chapin, controlling owner of the Tampa Suburban Co. which operated the city's first electric trolley cars. The line carried picnickers to the park for gala outings. Many romances blossomed under the moonlight as dancers partied on the handsome pavilion at the pier. Mrs. Chapin's company went broke in 1899 and was sold to the Tampa Electric Co. This event caused the loss of one of the city's most unusual sights: the private trolley car of Mrs. Chapin. She had used the private car to sally forth to do her shopping, visit friends and run other errands; now this privilege was denied her. The Chapins soon moved from Tampa.
Mrs. Chester W. Changin, controlling owner of the company which operated the city’s first electric trolley cars, purchased these acres and in 1924 developed this site into a tropical park asterminal for her line.

She named it for the French writer Jules Verne (1828-1905) whom in his famous novel “From the Earth to the Moon” first published in 1865, chose Tampa town as his launching site for the imaginary shot of his rocket to that planet some one hundred years ago.