1-1-1960

Dorr house was post-bellum social center

Hampton Dunn

Follow this and additional works at: http://scholarcommons.usf.edu/flstud_pub

Part of the American Studies Commons, and the Community-based Research Commons

Scholar Commons Citation
Dunn, Hampton, "Dorr house was post-bellum social center" (1960). Digital Collection - Florida Studies Center Publications. Paper 2686.
http://scholarcommons.usf.edu/flstud_pub/2686

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Digital Collection - Florida Studies Center at Scholar Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Digital Collection - Florida Studies Center Publications by an authorized administrator of Scholar Commons. For more information, please contact scholarcommons@usf.edu.
PENSACOLA --- The pretty cottage next door to Old Christ Church and overlooking historic Seville Square is the Dorr House. It's painted a pleasing yellow, called Seville saffron, with white trim, and was restored by the Pensacola Heritage Foundation, Inc., which has its headquarters there.

Right after the Civil War, Pensacola enjoyed a lumber boom and the Dorr House is a splendid example of the post-bellum homes. Erected between 1868-1871 by a socialite couple, Eben Walker and Clara Barkley Dorr it was the site of many gala parties.

The structure features high ceilings, rift pine floor, slate mantels and Gibbs windows on the front, and reflects the Victorian architectural traditions. The house is across from the site in Seville Square of a British guardhouse (constructed about 1765), the foundation of which was uncovered by the Pensacola Preservation Society in 1966.

In its later life, before restoration, the Dorr House declined and became a type of rooming establishment. The Heritage Foundation volunteers donated several thousand hours redecorating the Dorr House. It is furnished with antiques and the decor resembles that of the early Victorian Period.

The attractive building was the first structure restored at Seville Square and triggered a vast restoration program underway in this historic city.